Napping in Middle School? Never Has Relaxation Been So Stressful... Sleeping in class? Sure, it sounds great in theory.

But the reality is a moldy sandwich to the face, especially when it's part of a new class that has students running for the parking lot, literally. For Tyler Sput, it all starts when his school wins a national prize for his ill-fated essay on the joys of napping. Tyler wasn't serious, but the school is. And now, Tyler must deal with the consequences, including a bitey classmate, a werewolfy teacher, and a droopy-eared accomplice who just might be responsible for a string of carrot robberies in the Bayside area. If only Tyler had a time machine. Forget the lottery. He'd go back in time and rewrite that essay, because the new Structured Relaxation class isn't structured, and it sure isn't relaxing. It's a one-way ticket to mayhem, and Tyler is right at the middle of it. Will his classmate munch him when he isn't looking? Will his teacher sprout fur and fangs at the next full moon? Will the carrot-thievery be stopped for good? And who is the mysterious General Blunderboss?
