Out of the Cage: When an enforcer goes on a task for the council, he discovers a duty that will impact the rest of his life. Adisa Derringer has worked for the Shifter Council for over one hundred years. After refusing a councilman's orders, he narrowly avoids losing his enforcer position. Accompanying another councilman as his security is a second chance. Unfortunately, Adisa doesn't agree with why the shifter leader is visiting the pack--to assess the wolf shifter alpha's activities and perhaps remove him as leader of his pack.

Adisa approves of the wolf shifter's actions--discreetly fighting the scientists experimenting on their kind.

The Shifter Council doesn't see it that way.

When Adisa is shown one of the rescued shifters--a massive wolf seemingly driven to the brink of madness by the experiments done on him--he realizes the feral beast is his mate. If Adisa must again go against a councilman's orders, it may not be only his job he'll lose.

Can Adisa nurture the tiny spark of humanity he spots in the wolf's eyes, or will he lose out on both their futures...

and maybe their lives?
