When in doubt about what to do as a parent, picture yourself alone on a small island without modern connections to “google” any questions you might have. Follow your natural instincts. No clocks to tell you it might be time to feed or not to feed your baby. No TV to redirect your child, no 24hour market to buy the item you forgot to get.

You and your child will survive as humanity has for centuries before our modern world became electrified and electronically made minute. The missives in the book all present a more natural look at the world and the people living in it. Not so much on what present idea one should follow, but which innate guidance and tried traditions stood the test of time.
